

New Extreme Treks Take You Away From the Normal Tourist Trail

A leading gap year and career break company have launched a programme of remote treks that give you something different to the normal tourist trail.

The remote treks launched by Trekforce Worldwide this year are after a demand by people who wanted to do something different, but couldn't take months out of work or study to experience what you would normally often only see on a longer expedition with Trekforce.

The treks last between 13 and 17 days and you can choose from Borneo, Morocco, Belize, Bolivia, Papua New Guinea, and Guyana. Each has its own unique experience, from Attempting to cross one of the last great wildernesses on the planet by foot and canoe across the incredible island of Borneo to using longboats to navigate through the jungles of Guyana.

Trekforce expedition leader Matt Leggett says: "The great thing about it is that every expedition is a real adventure - the thrill of exploring some of the world's most beautiful and remote environments is incredible, and whether its dinner with a Touareg herders in the Sahara or discovering a new waterfall in the rainforests of Papua New Guinea, seeing things that few have seen before is all part of a normal day with Trekforce...."

The next extreme trek leaves the UK in May 2008 to Belize where you will experience the Maya Mountains, some of the best jungle in Central America, and the fantastic Chiquibul Chamber- before ending your trek at Caracol where you will watch the sunrise from the summit of the ancient temples surrounded by the dawn chorus of howler monkeys and toucans.
